Introduction

Physical disabilities services are only delivered through the self-administered services (SAS) model. The SAS model supports an individual with a disability in self-directing the personal assistance services they receive through the physical disabilities program. It is important to understand:

- A. You are the employer. You are responsible for hiring and managing your own personal attendants, which includes employee selection, scheduling, termination, performance evaluations, arranging back-up coverage, and submitting time sheets. Talk to your Nurse Coordinator about using the Consumer Preparation Service to learn more about your employer responsibilities.
- B. You will train your personal attendants on how and when you need assistance, changing levels in personal needs, grievance procedures, emergency coverage, exploitation, and abuse.

Self-administered assessment

Self-Administered Services (SAS) is a service delivery model that allows an individual with a disability to self-direct the personal assistance services they receive through the physical disabilities program. Physical disabilities services may only be delivered through self-administered services.

This means that in order to be eligible for Physical Disabilities Services, your patient must be able to:

- C. hire, train and supervise their own personal attendant(s);
- D. determine how and when services are provided; and
- E. instruct the personal attendant as to how and when assistance is needed.

If you have concerns about your patient's ability to complete these tasks, please state them in the "Comments" section below. This assessment is intended to identify any issues of concern or deficits that may interfere with the patient's ability to self-direct the physical disabilities services needed.

I certify that the patient, based on the assessment above:

Is able to self-administer their program.

Is not able to self-administer their program.
